THE Bull Pup meeting, on Saturday, to which the faithful were invited, yes, urgently entreated to be present, did not pan out worth cent. Four or five persons from the country searched diligently-during the most of the day for the crowd of Bull-dozers, but no one could be found who had the hardihood to declare in public that they believed in the election of Tilden. If any meeting was held (and we understand from reliable Democrate that none was held) it was in some dark corner, away from the sight of honest men. Give 'em another blast brother Gaumer.

At the height of the splendor of imperial Rome, the Colosseum, which is still wonderful in its ruins, was the great center of resort. It covered five acres of ground and had seats for $7,000 persons. It was oval in shape, its dimensions being 629x513 feat. When it was dedicated by Titus, 5,000 will beasts were skain in the arena, the games insting for nearly one hundred days. There Christians were exposed to the furry of lions and tigers, here gladiators fought to the death, and here chariot races were held, at which the driving wass of priors that at every course around three or four drivers and horses were crushed. The brush of one of the greatest of French artists has illustrated the chariot races and the gladiatorial contests of the Colosseum, and the visitors to the Centennial will remember seeing a copy of one of them there. The pictures are very brilliant in their coloring and spirited in their action. The pictures are very brilliant in their coloring and spirited in their action.
